ENDLESS JOY - SS21

Endless Joy is a collection of artworks presented on garments. Bespoke fabrics are transformed into wearable art. Each garment is born as an artwork, created on the wind and made with love in Bali.

As advocates for spirit and the reverence of nature, each piece is instilled with cryptic symbology. Shrouded in mystery the often subversive artworks play host to a motley crew of deities, shamans & spirits. Through an acid-trip of world culture and comparative mythology the psychedelic experience is laid bare.

3% of profit goes to charity and for every garment sold a tree is planted.

All the love all the power. Stevie & Lexi

RIMBA

To indigenous people the jungle is the universe. It's a place to call home, it's where they hunt, forage and experience a way of life that has all but disappeared from our planet. It is a sacred place that offers connection to spirit, ancestor, animal, nature and the cosmos. The jungle offers nourishment, healing and protection... But if you are unfamiliar with its magic or blindly unaware to its ways, it has the power to swallow you whole.

In a technicolor 'Rimba' (Bahasa Indonesian for jungle) a couple of bizarre blue beings meet. Maybe spirits or shamans, or merely creatures guised as them, they stand under the canopy of the acid fuelled palms. The midnight vagabonds greet each other in a magical clearing on the wispy-pink grass, where the water reflects the stars. A white tiger sits peacefully by the side of one creature, the other has genitals aflame and two left feet.

With impressive mane's of fiery red hair and their faces painted like drag queens, their movements are strange and unnerving as they appear to be getting used to their bodies and give-off the impression that maybe they're new to inhabiting them.

ASRI

The beautiful Indonesian word 'Asri' does not have a direct translation in English. The word pertains to a certain kind of beauty that pleases the eye and calms the senses. The word 'Asri' often describes a place or environment that typically holds a soothing view or atmosphere and is a space that offers peace and tranquillity through its lush and natural surrounds.

In a swirling jungle vista, vibrant flowers and psychedelic fauna flow into female and animal forms. The inseparable fractals of the natural world suggest the notion that perhaps as humans, we are not separate from nature, but part of it.

SNAKE GODDESS

SNAKE GODDESS

One of the most mysterious archaeological finds in the remains of the Minoan palace at Knossos was a figurine later identified as the Snake Goddess.

The water spirit Mami Wata (Mother Water) is celebrated throughout much of Africa and the African Atlantic through the honouring of the essential, sacred nature of water. Mami Wata is often portrayed as a mermaid, a snake charmer, or a combination of both.

Renenūtet was a goddess of nourishment and the harvest in ancient Egyptian religion.

Across mythological traditions the snake goddess in all her guises is a powerful and evocative image. Associated with fertility and sexuality, the image of the serpent is often symbolically associated with the renewal of life as it sheds its skin periodically.

At once beautiful, protective, seductive, and dangerous, the serpentine deity is depicted with a sturdy gaze and ample bosom. Sitting amongst stylised palms lashing out like razor blades, we can feel the magic of her life-giving breasts and celebrate her matriarchal power.

BARONG

BARONG

Barong is a character unique to the mythology of Bali, Indonesia. As the king of the good spirits Barong fights a never-ending battle with the demon queen Rangda. His worship pre-dates Hinduism and is a relic of animism—the belief that animals have supernatural powers.

In the Barong dance, Barong is brought to life by two dancers moving as one, encased in an ornately decorated garment. The battle between Barong and Rangda represents the eternal battle between good and evil... like yin and yang they cannot exist without the other... There is no good without evil, no light without darkness. According to Balinese legend, neither Barong nor Rangda are truly victorious, they are the forces of good and evil, they are order and chaos and as the embodiment of dualism they must remain in balance.

Throughout the villages of Bali, the Barong is a revered and protective force. He is represented by a mask, from the figure's mask hangs a beard of human hair decorated with frangipani flowers, this is where the Balinese believe the magic power of Barong is thought to reside. The sacred masks are often kept in the village's Pura Dalem, the temple of death or in a small shrine near the bale Banjar (the meeting hall).

The Barong Ket, or Lion Barong is the most popular, although the spirit sometimes takes other forms such as: Barong Celeng: the Boar, Barong Macan: the Tiger, Barong Naga: the Dragon or Serpent and Barong Gajah: the Elephant; these various animal forms are associated with different villages and tied to specific sacred dances and festivals.

SAMSARA

ENDLESS JOY - SS21

SAMSARA

A lively stage (blue as the sky or yolk-like yellow) is decorated by a flutter of exotic birds, flowers and humanoids as an exploration of 'being' unfolds. They wander blissfully unaware and navigate the mysterious thing called life. Every individual passes through the world as an expression of the whole realm of nature and they are but a unique action of the total universe.

A bald man is cloaked in a cape made of stars. A stream of water directly flows through another man's body as it splits in two and travels to the ice peaked mountain. Purple demons play their instruments as a tiger strides by, he is mounted by an unknowable deity. Encased in a giant egg, a pair of nudes dance, is it a festive ceremony or a representation of the alchemical Rebis. They carry an owl and swing a collection of giant berries. Do the Archers take aim to destroy or release? In some form of ritual two young men hold snakes in mouth and a woman kneels to tickle the chin of a fellow animal. Also making another appearance is a therianthrope in the form of a turtle with a mans head... does he symbolise the patience required for transformation and enlightenment or is he simply a slow-moving chap on his way to nowhere and back again.

Samsara is the Buddhist principle of the beginning-less cycle of death and rebirth to which life in the material world is bound. Does the mind turn outwardly... lost in projections, or is the mind turned inward and recognises its true nature?

Mandrills are the largest of all monkeys. They are shy and reclusive primates that live only in the rainforests of equatorial Africa. No other mammal is coloured in such an extraordinary manner as the male mandrill.

Depicting a large, powerful Mandrill with gentle hands and a soft gaze nestled amongst the foliage of a sumptuous, Sub-Saharan rainforest. Following the idea of Henri Rousseau's 'Portrait landscape painting' neither landscape nor figure take prime position, but rather both elements work together to create one harmonious entity.

TIGRE

The tiger is a symbol deeply ingrained in the human psyche. Once feared and revered for its deadly power and grace, now hunted to near-extinction by most cultures. The tiger is currently extremely endangered with less than 4000 wild tigers remaining.

Depicted in a post-impressionist 'naive' manner with a nod to Antonio Ligabue and our old friend Rousseau. Fantastical tigers, startled and frenzied, leap from the canvas as both the power and fragility of the wild is laid bare.

When caught in the gaze of nature— one should never look away from life.

“We live in a culture where it has been rubbed into us in every conceivable way that to die is a terrible thing. And that is a tremendous disease from which our culture in particular suffers...

Beauty appears to be inherent in nature. Turned-on and self-pollinating, flowers in all their intoxicating splendour creep and climb. The flower is the reproductive structure found in flowering plants, It is a blossom and a bloom. Much like us, the biological function of a flower is to affect reproduction. The flower is a lure and a life-force.

'The tree which moves some to tears of joy is in the eyes of others only a green thing that stands in the way. Some see nature all ridicule and deformity... and some scarce see nature at all. But to the eyes of the man of imagination, nature is imagination itself.' - William Blake

A psychedelic lotus flower radiates with a spectrum of colour.

The psychedelic plant also known as the 'blue lotus' is believed to have originated in Egypt's Nile River and was used by ancient Egyptians as a sacred substance to attain higher levels of consciousness.

The Lotus flower is regarded in many different cultures, especially in eastern religions, as a symbol of enlightenment, regeneration and rebirth. Its characteristics are a perfect analogy for the human condition, for, even when its roots are in the dirtiest of waters the lotus produces the most beautiful flower.

VIVAMUS

In a bold and minimal colour palette, dreamy woodcut-prints feature humanoid characters set amongst far- flung landscapes.

Ancient cultures, forgotten rituals and therianthropic copulation are looked over by ancestral spirits; complemented by totemic iconography and scrawled to be read between the lines is the Latin phrase “Vivamus, Moriendum Est” (Let us live, since we must die).

Inspired in-part by Paul Gauguin's painting ‘Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going?’ ... surely a question we can never truly answer but a conundrum that's always fun to ponder.

ROMULUS & REMUS

ROMULUS & REMUS

The legend of Romulus and Remus is truly the stuff of legends: twin children demigods, raised by wolves, grow up to become the founders of the city of Rome.

Painted in an expressive cubist style and based on an ancient Roman mosaic and the Capitoline Wolf. This artwork depicts Romulus and Remus as demonic looking infants who grow fat from the milk they suck from the stylised teats of a grinning she-wolf.

The prominence of Romulus and Remus in the Roman creation myth likely owes to the Romans' own cultural identity as strong, fierce, and conniving survivors. As a culture, perhaps they believed themselves to be wolf-like. Embraced by the ancient Romans as a proud part of their founding history, the tale reflects the Roman view of their empire as destined by the gods. It is also a savage tale of murder, kidnapping, and war... an unstable myth perhaps for any civilisation to be built upon.

The universal theme of twin-male heroes is documented in the mythologies of nearly every culture: African, Mayan, Roman, Greek and Eastern Indian mythologies. We are most familiar with the vying male twins like Romulus and Remus but many other examples of twin boys, amicable as well as rivalrous, abound. Each twin constitutes only half an individual psychically. It is because the two are only complementary halves, that they have always to be forced into action.

For constructive and integrated activity to occur, the two halves must be united.

Throbbing beings are devoured by planetary entities, nature blossoms and decays. Male and female collide on a waves of the cosmic ocean, as the never-ending cycle of rebirth drifts into eternity.

KALA RAU

ENDLESS JOY - SS21

KALA RAU

Dewi Ratih is a Balinese lunar deity. The Balinese have a myth which is believed to be the origin of the lunar eclipse, it features the goddess Ratih and the demon Kala Rau.

In a vicious act of revenge the demon Kala Rau opens his mouth wide, crooked-teeth protrude from a wiry beard and with wild bulging eyes, filled with emotion, this is the moment Kala Rau will get his revenge on the gods and so the demon swallows the moon goddess whole... thus causing a lunar eclipse.

This celestial conflict began when the goddess Ratih told the god Wisnu that the demon was stealing a drink of 'tirta amerta' the elixir of immortality reserved only for the gods. Just as Kala Rau takes a sip of the elixir Wisnu quickly decapitates Kala Rau with his magic discus. However the elixir of immortality had reached the demons throat, so now only his head was immortal. Separated from his body and deeply enraged, the demon head began chasing the moon goddess across the heavens, occasionally catching her in his mouth to exact his revenge.

But as Kala Rau is now just a head with no body, he cannot hold her for too long and so the moon goddess Dewi Ratih rises amongst the heavens once again.

HEKATE

HEKATE

With a nod to cuban artist Wilfredo Lam and Picasso's cubist paintings, here we see a deity emerging from the shadows of the mind. In a flurry of horns and angular limbs, the elongated and deranged entities form geometric patterns that align like a pentagram in the centre of the image.

Triple faced and triple breasted her six arms fan out holding symbolic artefacts. Flanked by two hellhounds and serenaded by a fantastic cloven-hoofed duo of therianthropes... a goat headed satyr blows on his flute, whilst a trident wielding centaur helps prop-up the scene like two grotesque bookends.

Hekate is one of the most ancient and revered gods from greek mythology and the original embodiment of the great Triple Goddess. According to legend the “Queen of the Night” is most often linked with the dark of the moon and is said to preside over magic, ritual, prophetic vision, childbirth, death, and the underworld. Mistress of the crossroads, this lunar goddess dwells in caves, walks the highways at night, makes love on the vast seas and is the force that moves the moon.

In Jungian psychology as the Queen of the Underworld, and guardian of crossroads Hekate could be seen as a symbol of the unconscious mind. She enables us to converse with the hidden parts of the psyche. This Goddess of the Moon holds the key that unlocks the door to the way down, and bears the torch that illuminates both the treasures and terrors of the unconscious. Holding a snake as a symbol of spiritual death and rebirth, and a severed head as a sign of the destruction of ego, Hekate is a guide to carry us through the dark spirit world of the mind, wherein we may receive a revelation from deep within.
